Overview and Outlook

In what has been a tough month for fixed income funds globally; your fund over the past month has only declined by 0.42%. In spite of solid regional fundamentals, historically low default rates and positive sentiment as reflected by regional equity markets performance, the repercussions of the US sub-prime crisis continue to reverberate around the financial markets, severely denting confidence. On a macro level the expected interest rate action by the US Federal Reserve in December and possibly January should help to calm some of the credit market nerves, and should help the market to return to some pragmatism.

The best performing bond in your portfolio was our investment in the United Gulf Bank, which rose 0.25%, over the course of November. Once again we have positioned the portfolio so as to try and minimize global market volatility and to take advantage of a possible upturn in 2008.
